SUPPLY CHAIN TRANSPARENCY:
adidas discloses name, address, parent company, type of product and number of workers for most production units fully in line with the Transparency Pledge, provides additional information and makes data available in a machine-readable format. ➔ That’s great! We encourage adidas to pursue its frontrunner commitment around transparency.

LIVING WAGE PAID:
This means: adidas makes no claim and no public evidence was found that its suppliers are paying a living wage. ➔ adidas should respect the right of workers in its supply chain to a living wage and ensure full transparency in order to demonstrate the implementation of a real living wage at factory level.

adidas should commit publicly to ensuring a properly defined living wage is paid across its supply chain.

adidas should commit to a published plan describing how a living wage will be achieved in a reasonable time-frame.

adidas should ensure prices paid to suppliers are sufficient to cover a living wage and social protection contribution for all workers in their supply chain.

Several benchmarks are available for companies to measure whether wages are sufficient to meet the basic needs of workers and their families.

Of these, the company says it is using the following in its supply chain:
- Global Living Wage Coalition (Anker)
- FLA Wage Ladders

adidas reports publicly some information on the number of supplier facilities with democratically elected unions, or those covered by collective bargaining agreements.
